THE COLLEGE FREE SPEECH RANKINGS are the most comprehensive comparison of free speech climates at U.S. colleges and universities. Developed by the Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression, the rankings combine student survey data, written speech policies, and school responses to recent speech-related controversies to evaluate how well institutions uphold free expression. Schools earn higher scores when they protect open debate and viewpoint diversity and lose points when they restrict it.

To understand the student experience of free speech on campus, our survey partner, College Pulse, surveyed 68,510 student respondents from 257 colleges and universities from Jan. 3 through June 5, 2025. The College Free Speech Rankings are available online (rankings.thefire.org) for easy comparison between institutions.

We surveyed 265 Bucknell University undergraduate students. Key findings include:

- Bucknell ranks 133 out of 257 schools in the 2026 College Free Speech Rankings. The university earned a score of 57.16, an F speech climate.
- Bucknell experienced some dramatic shifts over the past year in its placement in several components, falling in the “Comfort” (-54 spots) and “Self-Censorship” (-67 spots) components while rising in the “Disruptive Conduct” (+61 spots), “Openness” (+64 spots), and “Administrative Support” (+49 spots) components.
- Bucknell students are less accepting of disruptive protest tactics than students nationally. The school ranks 4 on “Disruptive Conduct.”
- Bucknell students are uncomfortable expressing controversial ideas and they self-censor more than their peers nationally.
- Bucknell students do not want controversial speakers on campus.
- Bucknell earns a “yellow light” rating for maintaining four speech restrictive policies. If the university revised these policies and earned a “green light” rating, it would have ranked 14 overall.

Bucknell ranks 133 out of 257 schools in the 2026 College Free Speech Rankings. The university earned a score of 57.16, an F speech climate.<sup>1</sup> Bucknell saw some big improvements over the past year, rising considerably in both the “Administrative Support” (+49 spots) and “Openness” (+64 spots) components. Most notably, however, it ascended to fourth overall in the “Disruptive Conduct” component after ranking 65 last year. However, it also saw setbacks, particularly in the “Comfort” (-54 spots) and “Self-Censorship” (-67 spots) components.

The following report highlights one area where Bucknell excels and three where it performs poorly. In addition, it discusses Bucknell’s speech policies and what Bucknell can do to improve its free speech climate. No campus speech controversies influenced its ranking.

BUCKNELL STUDENT PERCEPTIONS OF FREE SPEECH

Students are less accepting of disruptive protest tactics

Bucknell University ranks 4 on “Disruptive Conduct,” after ranking 65 last year.

Compared to students nationally, fewer Bucknell students said disruptive tactics were acceptable, if only rarely, in response to a campus speech:

- 59% said shouting down a speaker to prevent them from speaking on campus was acceptable (compared to 71% among students nationally).
- 38% said blocking other students from attending a campus speech was acceptable (compared to 54% among students nationally).
- 20% said using violence to stop a campus speech was acceptable (compared to 33% among students nationally).

Students are uncomfortable expressing controversial ideas and self-censor

Ranking 249 of 257, Bucknell University is among the bottom 10 schools in the “Comfort Expressing Ideas” component. Bucknell ranks 197 on the “Self-Censorship” component after placing 130 last year.

Majorities of Bucknell students reported being either “somewhat” or “very” uncomfortable expressing themselves across five contexts. Furthermore, more students were uncomfortable compared to last year, particularly when expressing their views in a common campus space and publicly disagreeing with a professor.

Additionally, a quarter or more of Bucknell students said they self-censor either “fairly” or “very” often during conversations with other students on campus (28%), during conversations with professors (28%), and during classroom discussions (25%).

While levels of self-censorship have remained relatively steady at Bucknell since last year, levels decreased among students nationally in all three contexts, resulting in the school’s drop in ranking.

Students do not want controversial speakers on campus

Bucknell University ranks 157 on “Political Tolerance.”

Students were asked whether six speakers (three liberal, three conservative) who had previously expressed controversial opinions should be allowed to give a campus speech. Alarmingly, Bucknell ranks in the bottom quartile on three of the four subcomponents: “Tolerance for Liberal Speakers” (246), “Tolerance for Conservative Speakers” (200), and “Mean Tolerance” (249). Its saving grace was the “Tolerance Difference” subcomponent, where it ranked 60, which might be attributed to the ideological balance among the student body.

When it comes to conservative speakers, most students said their school should not allow someone who claims that “abortion should be completely illegal” (69%), “transgender people have a mental disorder” (76%), or that “Black Lives Matter is a hate group” (80%).

As for liberal speakers, students said the same about someone who claims that “children should be able to transition without parental consent” (63%), “the Catholic church is a pedophilic institution” (76%), or that “the police are just as racist as the Ku Klux Klan” (82%).

Opposition increased among Bucknell students for each of the six speakers since last year, but more so for the liberal speakers.

A ‘YELLOW LIGHT’ SCHOOL

Bucknell University earns an overall “yellow light” rating for its written policies governing student expression. The university maintains four yellow light policies and four “green light” policies. Two of Bucknell’s three harassment policies fail to meet the legal standard for peer hostile environment harassment in an educational setting, significantly undermining Bucknell’s free speech promises. The university also broadly defines bullying, opening up an array of speech protected by First Amendment principles to punishment. Any expression the university wishes to prohibit under the “bullying” definition would best be governed under revised hostile environmental harassment policies.

Bucknell also regulates “bias incidents” and encourages students to report them to the administration, threatening to chill and punish speech protected by free speech principles. Concerns related to bias are already addressed by existing harassment and discrimination policies. When soliciting reporting, the administration should limit its focus to conduct that violates existing policies on discrimination and harassment and the law.

Bucknell has not adopted the “Chicago Statement” or an official commitment to institutional neutrality.

HOW CAN BUCKNELL IMPROVE?

To foster a more comfortable climate and a culture of free expression, Bucknell University can reform its “yellow light” speech policies to earn an overall “green light” rating, which alone would have raised its ranking from 133 to 37. Ideally, Bucknell would pair these reforms with official statements committing to free expression and institutional neutrality similar to those seen in the Chicago Statement and “Kalven Report,” which would raise its score even further.

By improving and publicizing its speech policies and institutional commitments, Bucknell can show students that it cares about free speech, which in turn could improve the university’s middling “Administrative Support” (154) ranking. Additionally, by pairing improved policies with free speech training, Bucknell could further improve its campus climate by teaching students the value of freedom of expression and open inquiry, thereby leading to improved rankings in “Comfort Expressing Ideas” (249), “Tolerance of Liberal Speakers” (246), “Tolerance for Conservative Speakers” (200), “Self-Censorship” (197), and “Mean Tolerance” (249).

Overall, by promoting the university’s commitment to free speech through training and improved policies, Bucknell could likely improve its future rankings.
