THE COLLEGE FREE SPEECH RANKINGS are the most comprehensive comparison of free speech climates at U.S. colleges and universities. Developed by the Foundation for Individual Rights and Expression, the rankings combine student survey data, written speech policies, and school responses to recent speech-related controversies to evaluate how well institutions uphold free expression. Schools earn higher scores when they protect open debate and viewpoint diversity and lose points when they restrict it.

To understand the student experience of free speech on campus, our survey partner, College Pulse, surveyed 68,510 student respondents from 257 colleges and universities from Jan. 3 through June 5, 2025. The College Free Speech Rankings are available online (rankings.thefire.org) for easy comparison between institutions.

We surveyed 315 students at the University of Virginia. Key findings include:

- UVA ranks 21 out of 257 schools in the 2026 College Free Speech Rankings. The university earned a score of 70.33, a C- speech climate grade.
- Student perceptions dipped across nearly all areas surveyed compared to last year.
- 8 in 10 UVA students find shutdowns acceptable.
- 7 in 10 UVA students are uncomfortable publicly disagreeing with a professor and self-censor during classroom discussions.
- The number of UVA students who trust that their administration protects free speech has shrunk in half since 2023.
- UVA students don't want controversial speakers on campus.
- 6 in 10 UVA students find it difficult to talk about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.
- UVA was penalized for a 2025 incident in which an administrator threatened a student with a no-trespass order and possible disenrollment unless he left the spot where he was quietly protesting on university grounds.
- UVA earns a “green light” rating for maintaining minimally restrictive speech policies.

The University of Virginia ranks 21 out of 257 schools in the 2026 College Free Speech Rankings. The university earned a score of 70.33, a C- speech climate grade.<sup>1</sup> The following report highlights UVA's middling to poor performance across the student survey. In addition, it discusses UVA's speech policies and statements, its speech controversies, and what UVA can do to improve its free speech climate.

STUDENT PERCEPTIONS DIPPED ACROSS NEARLY ALL METRICS

8 in 10 students find shutdowns acceptable

The University of Virginia ranks 165 on the “Disruptive Conduct” component, rising from 200 last year.

However, compared to students nationally, UVA students were still more likely to say that students using disruptive conduct to stop campus speech is acceptable to some degree except when it comes to the use of violence.

- 77% of UVA students found shouting down a speaker at least “rarely” acceptable, compared to 71% of students nationally.
- 56% of students deemed blocking other students from attending a campus speech to be at least “rarely” acceptable, compared to 54% of students nationally.
- 33% viewed violence to stop a speech as at least “rarely” acceptable, compared to 34% of students nationally.

7 in 10 students are uncomfortable publicly disagreeing with a professor and self-censor during classroom discussions

More University of Virginia students were uncomfortable publicly disagreeing with a professor about a controversial political topic (72%) than their peers nationally (59%). And likewise more UVA students self-censored at least once or twice a month during classroom discussions (71%) than nationally (65%).

This year, UVA ranks 211 on “Comfort Expressing Ideas” compared to 107 last year. In addition, UVA ranks 183 on “Self-Censorship” compared to 112 last year.

At UVA, minorities of students felt comfortable expressing disagreement with a professor about a controversial political topic in a written assignment (46%), expressing their views on a controversial political topic during an in-class discussion (45%), expressing an unpopular political opinion to their fellow students on a social media account tied to their name (30%), and publicly disagreeing with a professor about a controversial political topic (28%).

The only area where a majority of students felt comfortable expressing their views on a controversial political topic was to other students during a discussion in a common campus space such as a quad, dining hall, or lounge (55%).

Chart: Emily Nayyer • Source: FIRE/College Pulse

We gave students the following definition of self-censorship:

“Refraining from sharing certain views because you fear social (e.g., exclusion from social events), professional (e.g., losing job or promotion), legal (e.g., prosecution or fine), or violent (e.g., assault) consequences, whether in person or remotely (e.g., by phone or online), and whether the consequences come from state or non-state sources.”

We then asked about the frequency with which they self-censor in three campus contexts.

- 59% reported self-censoring at least “once or twice a month” during conversations with other students on campus, up from 54% last year.
- 64% reported self-censoring at least “once or twice a month” during conversations with professors, up from 55% last year.
- 71% reported self-censoring at least “once or twice a month” during classroom discussions, up from 60% last year.

Students don't trust their administration to protect free speech

The University of Virginia ranks 210 on “Administrative Support.” Only 24% of UVA students found the administration either “very” or “extremely” clear in protecting freedom of speech, with an additional 46% who considered it “somewhat” clear. In terms of the administration’s willingness to defend a speaker’s rights during controversies, 22% of UVA students believed this was either “very” or “extremely” likely, while 51% saw it as “somewhat” likely.

Notably, perceptions that the administration protects free speech and the rights of speakers have dropped considerably since 2023 as seen in Figure 2.

Students don't want controversial speakers on campus

The University of Virginia ranks 163 on “Political Tolerance.” Students were asked whether six speakers (three liberal and three conservative) who had previously expressed controversial opinions should be allowed to give a campus speech. Minorities of students believed that five of the six speakers asked about should not be allowed on campus.

Students were most supportive of allowing a speaker who said that “children should be able to transition without parental consent” (62%), followed by the other liberal speakers.

- 45% would allow a speaker on campus who said that “the Catholic church is a pedophilic institution.”
- 44% would allow a speaker on campus who said that “the police are just as racist as the Ku Klux Klan.”

Conservative speakers, on the other hand, were less tolerated by UVA students. While 43% of students would allow a speaker on campus who said that “abortion should be completely illegal,” only 23% of students would allow a speaker on campus who said that “transgender people have a mental disorder.” An equal percentage said the same for a speaker who said “Black Lives Matter is a hate group.”

6 in 10 students find it difficult to talk about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict

The University of Virginia ranks 114 on the “Openness” component.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict was identified most frequently as a topic that is difficult for students to have an open and honest conversation about on UVA’s campus (61%). In 2021 and 2022, around 30% of UVA students reported the same.

The second most frequently identified topic this year was the presidential election (40%), followed closely by transgender rights (39%).

A ‘GREEN LIGHT’ SCHOOL WITH INSTITUTIONAL COMMITMENTS

The University of Virginia earns an overall “green light” rating for its written policies governing student expression. The institution maintains harassment and conduct policies that do not imperil free speech of students on campus and openly advertises their commitment to the First Amendment.

However, the university is governed by two harassment policies that earn “yellow light” ratings; these policies do not implicate UVA’s overall green light rating. This limited exception to the Spotlight rating system allows a school to earn an overall green light rating if it maintains harassment policies that comply with the current Title IX regulations but deviate from FIRE’s recommended harassment standard as articulated in the 1999 Davis v. Monroe County Board of Education Supreme Court decision.

In addition, UVA has endorsed a statement of the committee on free expression and free inquiry akin to the “Chicago Statement.” And in the last year, UVA made a commitment to institutional neutrality.

UVA'S SPEECH CONTROVERSIES

UVA was penalized for a 2025 incident in which an administrator accompanied by a campus police officer threatened to discipline a student who was quietly studying beside protest signs. Though the student was ultimately not sanctioned and reportedly received an apology from another administrator, the university was penalized for the initial encounter.

Outside the Judge Advocate General's Legal Center and School grounds (but still on university grounds), student Kirk Wolff engaged in expressive activity when he placed two signs decrying President Trump beside a folding chair on which he quietly studied. Shortly thereafter, a campus police vehicle pulled up and an officer accompanied by an administrator approached Wolff.

The administrator told Wolff that he was violating university policy and instructed him to leave or else "be issued a no-trespass order barring you from university property for up to four years." Wolff then called one of his law professors and, minutes later, the administrator reversed course and said the student was not breaking any rules. Three days later, Wolff met with the Associate Vice President for Student Affairs who told him that body camera footage showed that the administrator who confronted Wolff had not followed correct procedures and that the university would change its policies to no longer deploy campus police to speech-related incidents.

A university spokesperson stated that, "the content of the expressive activity in question was irrelevant to this encounter... No University policies were violated by University officials or the individual in question... It is accurate that a student affairs representative approached [Wolff] to gather information about their expressive activities on Grounds. Once it was determined that [Wolff] was affiliated with the University, his expressive activity continued that day, as well as the following Monday."

HOW CAN UVA IMPROVE?

While the University of Virginia is among the top 25 schools in this year's College Free Speech Rankings, it is struggling with how students perceive the free speech environment on campus.

UVA has a strong foundation with a "green light" Spotlight rating, adoption of the Chicago Statement, and a commitment to institutional neutrality. To close the gap between policy and perception, students must see their rights defended in both words and actions.

UVA leadership should more clearly and proactively articulate the value of expressive rights, particularly during moments of controversy, by publicly defending student and faculty expression and clearly communicating the value of free speech in a university setting. By doing so, UVA can demonstrate to students that it cares about free speech. These changes would improve not only their policy and controversy scores but also, possibly, the university's poor "Administrative Support" (210) ranking.

In addition, UVA should incorporate robust First Amendment education into first-year orientation to help students understand not only their rights, but also where lawful expression ends and unprotected conduct begins. This training might reduce the penalties for disruption-based speech controversies. It could also improve UVA's middling rank on "Disruptive Conduct" (165) along with scores on other components.

By promoting a commitment to free speech through training, improved policies, and public support, UVA could maintain its already good standing in the overall rankings and improve its standing among its students.
